Darwin's Theory

In South America, there are several islands known as the Galapagos Islands. There are volcanoes on these islands, and they have *erupted many times in the past. It is said that these islands were discovered by the Spanish in 1535. In 1835, the English researcher Charles Darwin reached the Galapagos Islands. Darwin traveled around the world on a ship to research nature. He made a very important discovery. Here he discovered a *unique group of *creatures. These creatures were unknown to European researchers at the time. He saw them and came to believe that creatures *evolve with the environment. He continued to study the creatures that lived there, and in 1859 he *compiled a book about how the creatures evolved. This book is called The Origin of Species. After Darwin published the book, he continued his research until his death. His ideas are considered correct by many scientists today. According to his view, all creatures have the same *ancestors, and they have evolved to live more easily in their environments. Many scientists today still use Darwin's ideas as a model for their latest research. This idea is known as *evolutionary theory. And, the book is still read by many people around the world.

I like summer vacation better than winter vacation. I have two reasons.

First, I enjoy going to the beach with my family. We go swimming, play in the sand, and have a picnic there. It's a lot of fun! Second, I like to go to summer festivals with my friends. We wear colorful yukatas, eat delicious food, and watch beautiful fireworks. It's a great memory for us! For these two reasons, I prefer summer vacation and look forward to the next one.
