The Life Cycle of Frogs

Frogs are amazing creatures with an interesting life cycle that is studied in biology. They go through several stages of metamorphosis* from the time they are eggs until they become adult frogs. Understanding the life cycle of frogs helps us learn about animal development and the changes that occur as they grow.

The life cycle of a frog begins with an egg. Frog eggs are usually laid in water, often in large clusters*. After one to three weeks, depending on the species and environmental conditions, tadpoles* come out of their eggs. Tadpoles are very different from adult frogs; they look more like fish with long tails and no legs. They live in water and breathe through gills*.

As tadpoles grow, they start to undergo metamorphosis. This is the process where their bodies change to become more like adult frogs. The first major change is the development of back legs, followed by front legs. At the same time, tadpoles begin to lose their tails and develop lungs, allowing them to breathe air. This process can take anything from a few weeks to several months.

Once metamorphosis is complete, the young frogs, also called froglets, leave the water and start living on land. They still have a small tail that eventually disappears. Froglets grow into adult frogs over the next few months. Adult frogs have a short body, long legs for jumping, and lungs for breathing air. They can live both in water and on land.

Adult frogs return to the water to lay eggs, and the cycle begins again. Frogs are an essential part of the ecosystem because they help control insect populations and are food for other animals.

In conclusion, the life cycle of frogs, from eggs to tadpoles to adult frogs, is an amazing example of animal development. By studying frogs, we can better understand the processes of growth and change in living organisms*.

3 ライティングテスト (16点)

I believe zoos are not important places to visit in our society. Zoos are not necessary for us to learn about and appreciate animals. For example, if we want to learn about animals we can do so in lessons at school or by reading books and watching documentaries. Also, zoos are places where wild animals are kept in fake habitats and this eventually causes them to lose their wild nature. Therefore, zoos are not important places to visit in our society or for learning about animals in the wild.
