The Wonderful World of Bees*

Bees are small, flying animals that have an important job in our world. They are known for making honey*, but their most important job is pollination*. Pollination helps plants make fruits. Without bees, many of the foods we enjoy, like strawberries, will become hard to grow.

There are over 20,000 species* of bees, and they are found on almost every continent*. The most famous bee is the ‘honeybee’. Honeybees live in large groups called colonies*. Colonies can have 60,000 bees. Each bee in the colony has a special job. The queen bee makes eggs, the worker bees find food, and the drones*, which are male bees, mate* with the queen.

Bees communicate with each other in wonderful ways. One of the most interesting ways is by dancing. When a worker bee finds a lot of food, it returns home and dances. The dance tells the other bees where to find the food. This way of communication helps the bees work together to find food.

Now, bees have many problems. Some bees are losing their homes and some are getting sick. This is bad for world farming. Scientists and farmers are working hard to find answers to protect bees and help them survive.

I like studying in the library more than studying at home. I have two reasons for this opinion. First, I can study harder because it is quiet. Second, I can check information in books. For these reasons, I like studying in the library more than studying at home.
